Top reviews The latest reviews of the Top I have so many good memories standing in a chair and helping my parents in the kitchen as a child. Even before I had my daughter Ellie, I had imagined baking Christmas cookies and making homemade pasta sauce with my own children helping me in the kitchen. But these images in my head have always involved much older children - children who can really help in the kitchen. I never imagined a child paused at the kitchen counter with me, although Ellie apparently has a different image on her head. She loves to learn and is always interested in what I'm doing, so if I let her play on the floor while I'm cooking or cooking, she's not a very happy camper. She's only 12 months old, so it's definitely not safe to have her in a chair by the counter. Enter the Guidecraft Kitchen Helper. It's an adjustable kitchen stool that puts Ellie on the counter with me, and even though it's $169, it's been a game changer and worth a lot of price. Before I had the Kitchen Helper, I tried to cook meals with one hand while holding Ellie in the other. This was not easy or safe, especially when I was near the stove or I needed to use a knife. Now she can see everything I'm doing while I have both hands free, and she's happy and entertained all the time. Setting up and design Amazon My husband set up Kitchen Helper in less than 10 minutes. The whole product is made of very solid and sturdy wood. The seat folds very quickly and easily when you want to store it, and it takes less than a minute to unfold and configure when you are ready to use it. I can even arm with one hand if I'm holding Ellie in the other. The bench comes with an anti-derrente rug for children to stay while on the bench, and a Kitchen Helper Keeper, which is a mesh covering the open side of the bench where the children would enter or leave. As soon as Ellie gets big the Let's take this off so she can get in and out on her own, but for now, it helps keep her safe and secure in the bank. The Kitchen Helper comes in five different colors, so you can choose the one that best matches Kitchen. We chose white. I like the design because it looks more like a mobile than a child item or toy, but it still has some cute features that would keep kids entertained, like shape clippings on the sides (more on that later), a small blackboard on one side, and a small frame on the other side. As Ellie is still so young, she hasn't used it yet, but I could see them being fun for her to play or write the dinner menu when she gets older. For now, Ellie loves to see me from the bench while playing with measuring bowls and glasses. I also use the bench sometimes to feed her a little appetizer if she gets hungry while I'm still cooking dinner. I like that I can still supervise her while she's eating, instead of having her run away while I'm still in the kitchen. This stool has already made preparing meals much less stressful, and I can say that Ellie loves it too, because if I start cooking without her in Kitchen Helper, she will walk up to it and point to it. When she gets older, she'll be able to use the stool to really help me prepare ingredients and cook meals. It's so important that kids learn the process of how food gets to the table, so this is a great product to start teaching it from an early age. Safety first so much research as I did before buying this stool and as sturdy as it has been so far, there is always the possibility that Ellie could try to get out or fall, so I'd like you to do the same with this or any other product. You also need to be very careful what you put on the counter in front of the seat; you'd be surprised how far these little arms can get. Be sure to keep any dangerous, hot or sharp item well out of arm's reach. Potential cons to consider Amazon The anti-slip mat tends to fall off a lot when I fold the Kitchen Helper to store it. That's more of a minor inconvenience, but it's something to consider. I'm also not a big fan of the decorative square, star, and circle cutouts on the sides because they are the perfect base for my little climber. If you are using this for a child, you will need to be especially careful once they enter the climbing stage in which Ellie is currently. Since she's a little older, I don't think that's going to be a problem. The bottom line I absolutely love the Kitchen Helper. Before buying it, I was afraid it was a waste of money, but it was worth so much cost even at $170. There are a few other options out there, including the Little Partners Original Learning Tower ($199.99), which has large openings on the side so it can be more suitable for older children. Another option to consider is the UNICOO Kids Step Stool, which is under $100. I personally with Kitchen Helper because I like how it is very closed compared to a lot of other options. It's really tough, and has already made it much nicer to bake or make dinner. If you're struggling to get food in the while taking care of children and young children, I recommend the Kitchen Helper Guide.
